The difficulty of understanding today's parable of the wedding feast is the strange response of those who were invited. Some simply said, "No," and went about their own business. But the parable tells us that the rest mistreated the messengers and killed them. So why would you kill someone who is inviting you to a wedding feast? The response seems absurd. In fact the only way I can make sense out of it is to imagine that those who responded in that way did not see the king's offer as an invitation but somehow as an attack. They did not perceive the request to come as a gift but something that would do them harm.
